Rationale

This selective bibliography, intended for librarians, provides access to and information about university and other websites in the United States offering online, on-demand public lectures.

Online, on-demand public lectures are a significant academic product and a body of scholarly material that deserves attention from librarians and information professionals. Informal research indicates that on-demand public lectures are poorly represented in the WorldCat database. For example, the #2 bestselling book on Amazon.com on August 11, 2008 was Randy Pausch’s The Last Lecture; as of that date, the online version of this lecture had been viewed 6,167,093 times on Carnegie Mellon’s YouTube page, yet no record in WorldCat links directly to this version. It is hoped that this bibliography and subsequent research will encourage academic librarians to exert greater bibliographic control over on-demand lecture materials through WorldCat and their library catalogs.

This bibliography is the first of a two-part research project. The second part will focus on questions related to the cataloging of online public lecture materials:

- How many lecture series in this bibliography are available through WorldCat?
- What level of cataloging is appropriate for lecture series (brief or full, series-level or item-level cataloging)?
- What data fields should be mandatory in records for this type of material?
- Given current developments in OPAC and portal search technology, including WorldCat Local, what should be done to make this material more accessible?

Criteria for Listing

The universities listed in this bibliography are drawn from the Top American Research Universities, 2007 Annual Report issued by the Center for Measuring University Performance (available at http://mup.asu.edu/).

I have used the lists of “Top American Research Universities” on pages 8 and 10 of the report, which identify “the 51 institutions (26 private, 25 public) that rank in the top 25 nationally on at least one of the nine measures” and “the 37 institutions (10 private, 28 public) that rank 26 through 50 nationally on at least one of the nine measures.” The nine measures are described briefly on page 7. Nearly all of the universities surveyed in this bibliography provide on-demand access to public lectures. Public lecture content was not found for the following universities:

- Baylor College of Medicine (http://www.bcm.edu/)
- Mount Sinai School of Medicine (http://www.mountsinai.org/Education/School%20of%20Medicine)
- New Mexico State University (http://www.nmsu.edu/)
- University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati (http://www.uc.edu/)
- University of Colorado, Boulder (http://www.colorado.edu/)
- University of Colorado Health Sciences Center (http://www.uchsc.edu/)
- University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center (http://www.utsouthwestern.edu/)

I have also identified, through Google searches, U.S. web sites that aggregate content from multiple universities or provide lists of university lectures or lecture pages. I intend this section of the bibliography not to be exhaustive but to demonstrate the various methods used to present public lectures.

The focus of this bibliography is on public-lecture series offered by universities. I occasionally reference lecture materials that derive from symposia, colloquia, and conferences, but these are not a focus. I do not reference course or classroom lectures, a distinct and large universe of material that deserves to be considered on its own, interviews, publicity videos, nor demonstration lectures.

Sources and Research Dates
Research was conducted between June 4th and July 11th, 2008. Internet search engines (primarily Google) and the search tools on university web sites were used to identify on-demand public lectures in audio-only or video format. While time limitations have not permitted an exhaustive listing of every lecture or lecture series available, the prominent lectures series – those that rise to the top of a University’s site search or Google’s search results – have been identified and listed. Follow-up searching was done in July and August 2008 to verify links, replace links, add examples, and locate additional lecture content.

Universities present public lecture materials in various ways. A number of universities offer an aggregating, central site for locating video and audio (e.g., MIT, University of Washington, and the University of Pennsylvania). Some universities consolidate their materials using the iTunes U. service (e.g., Duke, Stanford) or a podcasting page (e.g., the University of Utah). Some university departments post lecture materials on a departmental lecture site. Many universities highlight on-demand lecture content through news or current events listings.

Each entry in the university section of the bibliography lists the name of the university, the name of the site providing the most direct access to the on-demand material, and site URL. When a lecture series is associated with a university as a whole, it is listed under the name of the university; when associated with a department, it is by department. Most web site descriptions are taken from the web sites themselves. Examples of videos are listed to give a sense of the quality of the material that is available.

The section devoted to sites aggregating material from multiple universities includes separate sections for commercial and non-commercial sites.
Aggregating Lecture Sites

Commercial Sites

Busitalks beta
http://www.busitalks.com/
A well-organized site that includes viewer-rated videos from academic, broadcast, and corporate sources. See also Govtalks, Humtalks, and Scitalks.

Free Science Videos and Lectures
http://www.freesciencelectures.com/
Site lists both course and public lecture videos. Supersedes a blog, Free Science and Video Lectures Online!, available at: http://freescienceliveonline.blogspot.com/

FreeVideoLectures.com
http://freevideolectures.com/index.html
Primarily course-related lectures, this site also includes some public lectures. Description from web site:
“We are small team from Bangalore, INDIA. Working hard for bringing free educational videos to everyone. We only ask one thing of you: that you share these resources with others so that, together, we can bring free education to all.”

Govtalks beta
http://www.govtalks.com/
A well-organized site that includes viewer-rated videos from academic, broadcast, and corporate sources. See also Busitalks, Humtalks, and Scitalks.

Humtalks beta
http://www.humtalks.com/
A well-organized site that includes viewer-rated videos from academic, broadcast, and corporate sources. See also Busitalks, Govtalks, and Scitalks.

iTunes U
As of August 8, 2008, 71 colleges or universities are using the iTunes service to present lectures and other materials. Requires free Apple software for access.

Lecturefox - Free University Lectures
http://www.lecturefox.com/
Description from web site blog:
“Lecturefox is a free service. You can find high-quality classes from universities all over the world. We collect without exception lectures from official universities, and we have a special interest in lectures from the faculties [in] physics, chemistry, computer science and mathematics. In the category “faculty mix” you can find miscellaneous lectures from other departments like electrical engineering, biology, psychology, economics, history and philosophy.” http://www.lecturefox.com/blog/about

Wikipedia - List of public lecture series
A short list of lectures in various subject areas.

Openculture

University & College Podcasts - Free Educational Podcasts
Openculture offers a list of colleges and universities that offer lecture content through iTunes or via the web. Posted on October 2, 2006, the list is a one-time list of 42 colleges or universities in the United States and abroad.

Public University Online.com

Users of this site are invited to contribute content. A site map provides an overview of available content. As of August 8, 2008, subjects with the most content were medicine (402 lectures) and computer science (944 lectures).
Description from web site:
“Public University Online is a university based on public online lectures worldwide, a university open to anyone. Please feel free to search our university site to see if you can find any inspiring lectures or following discussions. Attending is free of charge, based on principles of transparency and the sharing of knowledge for the good of mankind.”

Scitalks
A well-organized site that includes viewer-rated videos from academic, broadcast, and corporate sources. See also Humtalks, Govtalks, and Busitalks.
Description (via campustechnology.com):
“In the same vein as YouTube, SciTalks.com (Boston, MA) has launched a searchable online collection of science lecture video files from across the world. Currently [as of 07/11/2007] 1,000 lectures are online, with new videos being added daily. Access to the site is free; users need only establish a username and password. From there they can upload their own video, submit links to new lectures for listing on the site, search for upcoming conference, create a collection of favorite videos, and share that collection with others.”
YouTube

http://www.youtube.com/

Many universities have a presence on YouTube and provide access to academic lectures through this free video streaming service.
Non-Commercial Sites

Internet Archive

Welcome to Open Educational Resources
The Internet Archive includes an educational resource page permitting searches by mediatype: education.
Description from web site:
“Welcome to the Archive’s library of Open Educational Resources and university lectures. This library contains hundreds of free courses, video lectures, and supplemental materials from universities in the United States and China. Many of these lectures are available for download.”
http://www.archive.org/details/education
Also available: a page archiving Princeton’s UChannel Public Affairs Lectures.
http://www.archive.org/details/ucpublicaffairslectures

Jurist

Law School Video Lectures
http://jurist.law.pitt.edu/live.htm
Description from web site:
“JURIST presents video (and some audio) webcasts of major law school lectures, conferences, panels, debates and special events.”

Multimedia Resources for Academics
http://itsinfo.tamu.edu/handouts/multimedia-resources-for-academics.pdf
This online bibliography produced by Texas A & M includes a two-page listing of significant lectures, symposia, workshops, etc. (last modified 08-Mar-2007).

Research Channel

Video Library
http://www.researchchannel.org/prog/
Offers access to more than 3,500 titles in various disciplines.
Description from web site:
“ResearchChannel was founded by a consortium of leading research and academic institutions to share the valuable work of their researchers with the public. ResearchChannel is now available to more than 30 million U.S. satellite and cable television subscribers and our Web site is visited by more than 1.6 million visitors each year. The channel is also available on 70 university and school-based cable systems in the United States and in other countries.”
Videolecture.net

The well-designed site features lectures on numerous subjects. As of August 7, 2008, 171 events, 3140 authors, 3406 lectures, 4878 videos are represented. The major focus is computer science, with 1347 items.

Example:

Umberto Eco, On the History of Ugliness

http://videolectures.net/cd07_eco_thu/

UChannel

UChannel is also available via YouTube: http://www.youtube.com/uchannel

Description from the website:

“The UChannel (also known as the University Channel) makes videos of academic lectures and events from all over the world available to the public. It is a place where academics can air their ideas and present research in a full-length, uncut format. Contributors with greater video production capabilities can submit original productions. [...] While it has unlimited potential, the UChannel begins with a focus on public and international affairs, because this is an area which lends itself most naturally to a many-sided discussion. [...] The UChannel project is an initiative of Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, which is leading the effort to build university membership and distribution partners.

Undergraduate Lecture Series
http://cohesion.rice.edu/engineering/Engineering/engineering.cfm?doc_id=8805
Description from web site:
“The undergraduate lecture series is designed primarily for an undergraduate audience, covering topics from the creativity of engineering and science to entrepreneurship, ethics, and the advantages of pursuing an advanced degree. Speakers are drawn from industry and academia. Each lecture lasts approximately 50 minutes and is followed by a question and answer session and a reception honoring the speaker. The series was established in October 2002. Our goal in establishing this lecture series is to bring undergraduate engineering and science majors into the culture of attending lectures for professional development. We wish to challenge researchers and industry participants to convey to the students why they love whatever it is they do. The series is designed to introduce undergraduates to broad concepts in research and innovation.”

Description from web site:
“Every semester, Dean Sternberg sponsors a Dean's Faculty Forum that features the research and scholarship of faculty members from Arts and Sciences. The Forum is structured with a lecture by one faculty member on a particular topic followed by commentary from a faculty discussant. The most important aspects of the Dean's Faculty Forum are that it appeals to a broad audience and gets people excited about the scholarship being done at Tufts. All of our previous events have certainly achieved this, and we are excited to continue this program.”

GRASP Lecture
http://www.ma.utexas.edu/users/benzvi/GRASP.html
Description from web site:
“GRASP is a new lecture series at the University of Texas at Austin, which is aimed at bringing some of the fundamental concepts and big picture of the GRASP areas to a wider audience (the intended target audience are beginning graduate students). These lectures will be digitally recorded and disseminated by streaming video, audio, and lecture notes through this website, with the goal of establishing an electronic resource for students (and others) wishing to be introduced to the GRASP subject areas. (The plan is for the website to also contain links to survey articles, scanned notes, and other helpful information.) The speakers are selected based in part on their ability to communicate fundamental ideas at a basic level to a broad audience.”
